- Cargo is discharged from the ocean vessel container, re-palletized at the hub and expedited onwards with airlines
- Cargo proceeds as air freight to final destination point
- Cargo moved under one single document, the Multimodal Transportation Document (MTD) from origin to destination, covering all different transportation modes
- Faster than pure Ocean, slower than pure air freight

- Time to market, getting cargo to destination at the right time and with the right transport mode
- Reduction in storage and inventory costs
- Mitigates delays in origins with airport congestions by moving large volumes in containers
- Useful where airline capacity is limited
